

Heber councilmen have decided that although the caboose is historical, it can't stay in front of the old tabernacle.

Tourist center

Heber says caboose must move

By SONNI SCHWINN
Herald Correspondent

HEBER CITY — The Heber Valley Chamber of Commerce made one last plea last week to the Heber City Council to let a caboose, used as a tourist information center, stay in front of the Wasatch Stake Tabernacle on Main Street.

However, the council unanimously rejected the proposal.

The tabernacle is being renovated and remodeled into Heber City offices, and the councilmen all agreed that the caboose would detract from the beauty of the building and grounds. They did concur with the Chamber's contention that the caboose is an important historical relic which should be preserved and offered to help find a suitable site to move it to.

Max Mawhinney, president of the Chamber, reviewed the importance of the railroad to the Heber Valley for 90 years. He said the caboose was built under 1880 patents and is one of the most rare. He said so many cities are trying to get cabooses that it's becoming almost impossible to find them anymore.

Councilman Wayne Clegg said he had probably ridden the Heber Creeper, shipped more sheep on it, and stolen more rides on it than anyone else at the meeting. He said the caboose should be preserved, but its setting should not be on Main Street. "I've lived in Heber City 62 years and I've never known a caboose to come down Main Street," he said.

Councilman Lincoln Rasband asked if the value of the caboose as primarily because of its historical or utility value. He pointed out that an information center for the Chamber and a museum is being provided in the new office building, so "the utility is lost. If it is heritage we're looking at, why does the heritage have to be at that particular spot?"
